The one essential, indispensable factor in a company being able to create the right customer experience that is so necessary for its continued survival is its people. A company will have among its employees, planners, enablers, and doers. But it doesn't pay to forget that all of them are people and that their roles can be compartmentalized in rigid fashion. A leader's first concern should be to formulate vision for his organization. The Vision must be an operating system for the company, providing a road map for the future and enabling the employees to benchmark themselves against the best in their class in the world. It also follows from this that the leader must build a first class team that is not only able to relate to his vision, but exhibits an enthusiasm to live up to the highest quality benchmarks.

If he is to truly energize his organization, a leader must select team members who are self driven and can meet and exceed the performance targets laid down by the organization. Another critical factor on which a leader's success hinges is his ability to stimulate a thinking environment within the organization. For decades, "Thinking" was the guiding philosophy at top international corporate's. All employees, not just the top management, should participate in ideation and adding value. A leader, in fact, must insist that his whole organization remain constantly in the ideation mode. If a leader is successful in getting the whole organization to "Think", a major competitive weapon will be unleashed.

Leadership is about excess to ability encouragement and guidance.
"A good leader never produces more followers they create more leaders."

Ganache

Ganache was founded in 1996 in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia. The word Ganache comes from the French word "jowl" meaning icing or filling for pastries using chocolate and heavy cream. This word was so frequently used it revolved into the name of the store. Ganache started when a Saudi woman would bake date cakes for charity. Before long, she started baking an assortment of cakes, French pastries, and chocolates. They were an instant success! Since her humble beginnings baking cakes at home, Ganache has grown significantly and continues to expand. Today Ganache focuses on introducing a wide range of new and innovative products.

Ganache specializes in home-made, high quality gourmet food. Our chefs use the best ingredients to create an amazing experience for you. Whether you're looking for American style cakes, appetizing French canapés, or traditional Arabic cuisine with a modern twist, Ganache has it all. We also offer a gourmet line of food and kitchenware products including coffees, teas, and jams...
